Its natural habitats are streams in wooded areas. Description The topography and toadlet is a species of the Australian Daintree Rainforest. It grows to in length. Its eyes, which are on the sides of the head, are positioned above the eyes of other species in this family. The female has a pair of small, rounded, bony oviducts and a pair of tubular oviducal glands. The eggs are laid in clusters at the base of leaves or other litter. The tadpole is long and slender, with an oval body and a tail that is characteristically long. It has an upper eyelid. Conservation This species is listed as vulnerable because of being restricted to small populations and a highly isolated, fragmented geographic range.
