RISE. The Runes The basic elements of the world of the Elden Ring are formed from runes, which are found in odd places. The number of runes in this world is infinite, but the ratio of runes to non-runes is 1:31,000,000,000. Runes have mysterious powers, which affect the world of the Elden Ring. New knowledge concerning runes will be released as you proceed. Play ELDEN RINGQ: Compare character array for how many times it is preceeded by a specific character (C language) I am trying to write a program, and I need to write a comparison for the character array(char * names[]) for how many times it is preceeded by a '-' character. example of possible input: -blah/blah/anotherblah-blah/blah/ -blah/blah/anotherblah-blah/blah/ output: 2 // as in 2 '-' preceed the string I know I will need to take each characters' index and make it a pointer (in the form of char ) then cast each character's index to a char *. then I will know how many times each character in that character array is preceeded by a '-' but I am not sure how to implement this logic. EDIT: Ok, so I have a working version for this char names[15] = {'a', 'b', 'c', 'd', 'e', 'f', 'g', 'h', 'i', 'j', 'k', 'l','m'}; char * array = names; char * name_ptr; int count = 0; while (array!= NULL){ name_ptr = array; array = strchr(array, '-'); if(!array){ break; } count++; array++; } printf("%d ", count); free(array); I am now trying to figure out how to implement a function that will have an array that will be passed as a parameter and it will have 5 characters in it and it's length. In the above example, the array is names, but it's declared as char *names[5]. How can I pass the function an array of 5 characters
