in combination with chemotherapy, can change the nature of disease on the cellular level, further influencing the immune response. The data presented here is the first to investigate the impact of chemoimmunotherapy on the activation status of CD8⁺ and CD4⁺ T-cell subsets. Combining chemotherapy with abemaciclib enhanced antitumor immunity via increased CD8⁺ T-cell activation and production of interferon- γ , while chemotherapy with cyclophosphamide had a minimal effect on the activated T-cell population. These data suggest that CD8⁺ T-cell function, and possibly CD4⁺ T-cell function, can be significantly improved during chemoimmunotherapy compared with chemotherapy alone. In addition, a greater improvement was observed when the chemotherapeutics were combined together with abemaciclib. As abemaciclib and cyclophosphamide have distinct mechanisms of action, this result is not unexpected and it reflects previous findings that have demonstrated increased efficacy when two different chemotherapeutics are given at the same time ([@B39]). The addition of abemaciclib to regimens such as cyclophosphamide or cisplatin and gemcitabine is an active area of research in several tumor types ([@B42]). A recent study found that abemaciclib combined with docetaxel had higher PFS and OS when compared with treatment with docetaxel alone in patients with HER2⁺/HR⁻ ABC ([@B43]). Further, combination therapy with abemaciclib has been evaluated in several other tumor types, including breast cancer ([@B44]--[@B48]) and high-risk Hodgkin's lymphoma ([@B41]). Our data also demonstrate that modulation of the tumor-infiltrating immune cells with chemoimmunotherapy can not only enhance PFS but also overall survival, particularly when the treatment is combined with a tyrosine kinase inhibitor. Although the precise mechanism of action of the chemotherapeutics in combination with chemoimmunotherapy is not fully understood, these results indicate that the impact on immune cells may be more pronounced in cancer types with predominant lymphocyte infiltration such as MBC. Interestingly, we found that lymphocytes in the tumors of patients who have received an autologous vaccine demonstrate higher levels of activation when compared with those patients who did not receive an aut

Police have arrested a 16-year-old girl after she allegedly sexually assaulted a 13-year-old boy at a western Toronto school Monday. Officers were called to Markham Road West and Nicholsons Line just before 10 p.m. They found the boy in an office with a female teen suspect at the Max Rady School on Coxwell Avenue. Police allege the female suspect sexually assaulted the 13-year-old, while the boy remained in the office with her. She then reportedly ran out the school, leaving the victim alone in the office. The suspect and the boy were placed in the custody of Child and Youth Services. Mycobacterial spindle cell tumor of the falciform ligament. Spindle cell neoplasms of the liver are a group of increasingly recognized lesions that mimic spindle cell carcinoma and sarcoma. We present an unusual case of a spindle cell tumor of the falciform ligament that was identified radiologically as a hepatic hemangioma in a 29-year-old woman who was being evaluated for hypertension. At laparotomy a lesion involving the falciform ligament and largest hepatic vein was resected and the lesion proved to be a mycobacterial spindle cell tumor with extensive involvement of the falciform ligament and great vessels. The fulminate and indolent nature of this lesion underscore the importance of considering spindle cell liver neoplasms in the differential diagnosis of hepatic hemangiomas, especially in patients with hepatic disease or past history of primary tuberculosis.
